The Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the Europe an Union to Japan
Patricia FLOR

I am happy to again address you for this special event, the Children's United Nations for the Future. We need to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) so that everyone, regardless of nationality, race or gender, may continue to live happy, sustainable lives. I believe you know about the SDGs but the goals may sound like a huge project to you. But think about it like this: What society do you want to live in when you grow up? Do you want to breathe clean air and swim in clear blue ocean waters or eat healthy food? I understand that the main theme for the 2nd Children's United Nations for the Future is 'gender equality.' Many girls in Afghanistan can now no longer go to school. But everyone has the right to get an education, to live in a society that allows them to fulfill their potential on an equal footing, regardless of gender. Be courageous and demand that your and all children's rights are respected. I hope children from all over the world participating in today's conference will share what they learned and discussed with their family and friends. Take a step toward achieving the SDGs as the leaders of the next generation!

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the King of Morocco
Rachad BOUHLAL

"Children's UN for the future - SDGs Peace Communication Project" is a wonderful initiative that gives an opportunity for children from all over the world to communicate and to know each other. I commend the effort of the organizer in making this an annual event, and I am pleased to send this message for the second consecutive year. The main theme of this year, Goal 5 of SDGs "achieving gender equality," is an important topic that everyone should share and be aware of. In Morocco, under the leadership of HM King Mohammed VI, we have made the promotion of gender equality a proactive strategy, emanating from a conviction that gender equality is a fundamental human right, a legal imperative and a social and economic requirement. I would like to encourage all children of all over the world, to study hard, to pursue what you like to do, and to think about what you can do for others. Dear children, the future is for you, and hand-in-hand, I believe you can make a bright future where everyone can enjoy a fulfilling life.

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Singapore
Peter TAN Hai Chuan

Singapore supports the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. Sustainable Development Goal 4 aims to ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all. Singapore's philosophy towards education is grounded in our belief that the wealth of a nation lies in its people. Part of education is to nurture our youth with the necessary skills and values for them to be civic-minded, socially responsible and contribute positively in a globalised world. The theme of gender equality for this year's event is particularly relevant, and I hope that the event would foster a positive mindset on this topic among the children. Our children are our future. To build a better future, let us begin with our children.

Leader of Diet Members Supporters Club / House of Representatives
Katsunobu KATO

In 2030, it will be a year when all of you are adults. Try to set up opportunities to communicate with the people of the same generation from all over the world and think about what generation you want to create with your friends from different countries. Imagine your future more concretely. Think about and decide what you want to do in the future. Overcome difficulties one by one with a strong will to make this dream come true. I believe that a bright future is waiting for you. We adults will also do our best to support and help you.

We are now facing global challenges transcending national borders such as the COVID-19 pandemic and climate change. In order to protect this peaceful and prosperous world, not only the governments, but also everyone in the world, from children to adults, has to cooperate and work together beyond national borders. Each person's small daily actions will become an important step to achieve our goals. In the future, what world do you want to live in? What should we do to make that world? SDGs is a compass for us to think about these questions and take actions. Try to be aware of the SDGs in your daily lives. I look forward to your efforts from now on.
